The Dog and the Dynamite.

burg, Ind., Saturday from a week's outing among the lakes in the northern part of the State, and he relates a narrow escape some of his party had from a terrible death.

Among the number were a couple of Chicago young men. One of them, a clerk named Sommers, had a quantity of dynamite with him, intending to experiment in capturing fish by means of the explosive. He set out on his expedition, accompanied by Wm. Walters and a fine water spaniel. The dog stool on the bank of a small lake to explode when thrown into the water. About this time the other members of the party appeared upon the scene.

Lighting the fuse, Sommers threw the dangerous explosive far out into the water, and every member of the party was a close observer of the result, thus paying no attention at all to the dog, which im-mediately plunged into the water and swam out after the dynamite cartridge. Seizing the explosive in his mouth, the dog started back for shore with it. When the dog reached shore it shook he water out of its hair and ran for its owner, Mr. Walters. The fuse was still burning. Consternation seized the crowd as they apprehended the intenions of the dog, and realized that in the next moment the package it held in its mouth might scatter death and destruction on every hand, and every man took to his heels.

But the dog followed after his master, still holding on to the stick of dyna-mite, the fuse of which was still burning. Just as the owner was climbing a fence the cartridge in the dog's mouth exploded and the pursuing canine disappeared forever. Hair, blood and fragments of flesh and bone tilled the air, and some of the frightened men were struck with pieces of the dismem-bered dog, but fortunately none were i jured. A hole was made in the ground where the poor canine stood when it was blown to atoms, and the explosion was heard half a mile away.
The collar that encircled the neck of the spaniel was found suspended to the limb of a tree several hundred yards

A panic is feared in Japanese financial circles on account of the Corean im-broglio, say the Japanese papers. The banks have suspended their loans, while deposits are fast being withdrawn. Capitalists are unwilling to invest, as they expect to have an opportunity of making large profits through the panic. The money market is now very stiff. This condition is due to the belief that the present war will be far greater and more expensive than the Satsuma rebellion. One paper says the finance were then quite disorganized, but now they have been organized to such an extent that there is a surplus in the treasury. The surplus alone amounts to about $34,000,000
